ALL EYE OPERATIONS SUCCESSFULLY PERFORMED BY HIM

JACOB VOGEL, Gallitzin, Pa.

WAS REDUCED TO A WRECK AFTER TEN YEARS FEARFUL RAVAGES OF CATARRH AND RHEUMATISM. RAPIDLY RESTORED BY SALM CURED ME.

For ten years I have suffered terribly with Catarrh and Rheumatism. The disease affected my eyes so almost every other organ in my body became a physical and mental wreck. Have tried a number of remedies in the monarchy, but I grew worse and worse until as a last resort I gave my case to Dr. Salm and I am glad to say that since he first examined I began to improve from the very first month. That distressing cough and sick headache left me at the very start. Neither do I get short of breath any more and feel as strong as ever. The most wonderful of all is that I have not taken a single cold since the first month.

JACOB VOGEL,
Hazle Township Cambria Co., Pa. 54 years old.

HE INTRUSTED OUR BOY CHEERFULLY TO HIS CARE.

Our little boy has been cross eyed for some years and accordingly applied to Dr. Salm, who is a most splendid work of Dr. Salm's in time, so we extracted him cheerfully to his care. The operation was done within 1 minute's time and with but pain and now the eyes are straight, as you can see by pictures above.

CLOSE RE OF THE TEARDUCT CURED BY DR. SALM

I have had a good deal of trouble with my eyes for the last few years. Could not work as I used to make continually. Dr. Salm called it close re of the tearduct and operated on the same, and now I can work as heretofore. In my heart I intend of visiting no eye specialist.

MRS. MARY LITZINGER, Wilmore, Pa.

I HAVE BEEN TOTALLY BLIND—DR. SALM CURED ME.

I have been totally blind in my right eye for some years. No medicine did me any good, so I consulted Dr. Salm who visits Johnstown every two weeks. The Doctor made a fine and successful operation, so that I can see once more very well. Anyone wishing to see me can go to my home in the monarchy, Wilmore, Pa. I was 74 years old last May.

MARY LITZINGER.

CURED OF DEAFNESS AND CATARRH BY DR. SALM.

For some time my son has been very hard of hearing for some years also on account of a bad case of catarrh. We brought him to Dr. Salm for treatment, and now, after only four months, he is almost entirely well and I am certain that the Dr. can will finish a cure within the time set.

BENJAMIN LIMBERT,
Manderbach, Centre Co., Pa. His father

SUFFERED UNTOLD AGONIES FOR FIFTEEN YEARS—TRIED SEVEN DIFFERENT DOCTORS UNTIL TREATED BY DR. SALM.

For the last fifteen years I have been suffering very much have been treated by seven different doctors. Nearly all of them gave my ailment a different name and gave me medicine accordingly. The result was that I became worse and worse until at last I went to Dr. Salm, who pronounced my disease to be of the bladder, kidneys and stomach, and treated me accordingly, with the most splendid results. He has done me more for my health than all other in fifteen years and I took once more like I did fifteen years ago on feeling of tiredness or fatigue as I formerly had. I can do my own work and enjoy it. That was an impossibility heretofore.

THE CRICKET'S SONG.

Slowly the shadows have deepened and gathered;
Shorn lie the fields that were waving at morn;
Starlight falls silvern on hill-side and meadow;
Far is the cry of the whippoorwill borne;
Lonesome and eerie the note of the owl;
Forth come all creatures that hide and that prowl;
Over the meadows and over the wood,
Over the hoodlet and over the brake,
Rising, insistent and vibrant and shrill,
Over the valley and over the hill,
Myriad minstrels to music awake.
Song of the cricket
From copse and from thicket,
Last word of summer and hint of the frost,
Echo of melodies vanished and lost.

Year after year of the smile and the tear,
Year of the festival, year of the fast,
Still in the note of the cricket we hear
Something we knew in the heart of the past—
Something prophetic that whispers of gladness,
Blended and mingled with memories of sadness.
Story unending,
New cadences sending,
Oft as it comes with its eager repeat,
Rattling and sighing and swelling and dying,
Vibrant, insistent and mournful and sweet.

Slowly the night shadows deepen and gather;
Shorn are the fields that were waving at morn.
Starlight is faint on the hill and the river.
Dewdrops are gleaming on brier and thorn.
Song of the cricket
From copse and from thicket,
Last word of summer and hint of the frost,
Echo of melodies vanished and lost.

—Harper's Bazar.

SUCCEEDED TOO WELL.

Why the Admiral Was Not Pleased with the Dispatches.

"It's about four years ago," said the skipper, "that I was strolling one evening down the side of the harbor at Cove with my hands in my pocket, having nothing to do, nor any prospects of it, for my last ship had been wrecked off the Bermudas and nearly all the crew lost; and somehow when a man is in misfortune the underwriters won't have him at no price.

"Just before me, when I sat down, there was an old schooner that lay moored in the same place as long as I could remember; she was there when I was a boy.

"The evening wore on, the moon shone out, and I was just determining to go home again for the night when I saw two men standing on the steps of the wharf below me and looking straight at the Ark. I heard a voice from one of the persons, that I at once knew to be the port admiral's.

"'Well, Dawkins,' said he to the other, 'if you think she'll hold together I'm sure I've no objection. I don't like the job, I confess; but still the admiralty must be obeyed.'

"'O, my lord,' said the other, 'she's the very thing; she's a rakish-looking craft, and will do admirably; any repair we want a few days will effect; secrecy is the great thing.'

"'Ho, ho!' thought I, 'there's something in the wind here;' so I laid myself out on the anchor stock, to listen better, unobserved.

"'We must find a crew for her, give her a few carronades and make her as shipshape as we can.'

"'As to the crew,' said the other, 'there are plenty of scoundrels in the fleet here fit for nothing else. Any fellow who has been thrice up for punishment in six months we'll draft on board of her; the fellows who have only been once to the gangway we'll make the officers.'

"'A pleasant ship's company,' thought I, 'if the devil would only take the command.'

"And with a skipper proportionate to their merit,' said Dawkins.

"'Begad, it will wish the French joy of them,' said the admiral.

"'Ho, ho!' thought I, 'I've found you out at last; so this is a secret expedition. I see it all; they're fitting her out as a fire-ship, and going to send her slap in among the French fleet at Brest.'

"'Now, then,' said the admiral, 'tomorrow you will look out for the fellow to take the command. He must be a smart seaman; a bold fellow, too; otherwise the ruffianly crew will be too much for him; he may bid high; we'll come to his price.'

"'Never fear, my lord,' said the other, 'my care shall be to pitch upon one whose lo s no one could feel; some one without friend or home, who, setting his life for naught, cares less for the gain than the very recklessness of the adventure.'

"'That's me,' said I, springing up from the anchor-stock and springing between them; 'I'm that man.'

"'My poor fellow, you know not what you ask; this is no common case of danger.'

"'I know it all, my lord; I have heard it all.'

"'We,' said the admiral, 'must speak together again; be here to-morrow night at this hour; keep your own counsel of what has passed; and now good night.'

"'This is the plan,' said Dawkins, when we met again. 'As soon as that old craft can be got ready for sea, or some other if she be not worth it, you will sail from this port with a strong crew, well armed and supplied with ammunition. Your destination is Malta, your object to deliver to the admiral stationed there the dispatches with which you will be intrusted; they contain information of immense importance, which for certain reasons cannot be sent through a ship of war, but must be forwarded by a vessel that may not attract peculiar notice.

"'If you be attacked, your orders are to resist; if you be taken, on no account destroy the papers, for the French vessel can scarcely escape recapture from our frigates, and it is of great consequence these papers should remain. Such is a brief sketch of our plan; the details can be made known to you hereafter.

"In less than three weeks I weighed anchor, and stood out to sea one beautiful morning in autumn, and set out on my expedition. I have already told you something of the craft. Let me complete the picture by informing you that before twenty-four hours passed over I discovered that so ungainly, so awkward, so unmanageable a vessel never put to sea.

"If the ship was bad the crew was ten times worse. Every ill-conducted, disorderly fellow who had been up the gangway once a week or so, every unreclaimed landsman of bad character and no seamanship was sent on board of us; and, in fact, except there was scarcely any discipline and no restraint, we appeared like a floating penitentiary of convicted felons.

"So long as we ran down the channel with a slack sea and a fair wind, so long all went on tolerably well; to be sure they only kept watch when they were tired below, when they came up, reeled about the deck, did all just as they pleased, and treated me with no manner of respect.

"On the fourth day from the setting in of the gale as we entered the bay of Biscay, some one aloft descried a strange sail to windward, bearing down as if in pursuit of us. Scarcely did the news reach the deck when, bad as it was before, matters now became ten times worse—every counsel that drunkenness, insanity and crime combined could suggest being offered and descanted on.

"Meanwhile the chase gained rapidly upon us, and before noon we discovered her to be a French letter-of-marque with four guns and a long brass swivel upon the poopdeck.

"As for us, every sheet of canvas we could crowd was crammed on, but in vain; and, as we labored through the heavy sea, our riotous crew grew every moment worse, and sitting down sullenly in groups upon the deck declared that, come what might, they would neither work the ship nor fight her; that they had been sent to sea in a rotten craft merely to effect their destruction, and that they cared little for the disgrace of a flag they detested.

"Half furious, my first impulse was to run among them with my drawn cutlass and take heavy vengeance upon the ringleaders, when suddenly a round shot went flying over our heads.

"'Down with the ensign; strike at once!' cried eight or ten voices together, as the ball whizzed through the rigging. Anticipating this, I had made the mate, a stanch-hearted, resolute fellow, make fast the signal halyard aloft, so that it was impossible for any one on deck to lower the bunting.

"Bang went another gun, and, before the smoke cleared away, a third, which, truer in its aim than the rest, went clean through the lower part of our mainsail.

"'Steady, then, boys, and clear for action,' said the mate. 'She's a French smuggling craft that will sheer off when we show fight, so that we must not fire a shot till she comes alongside.'

"By this time the Frenchman was close up, and ranging his long gun to sweep our decks; his crew were quite perceptible—about twenty bronzed, stout looking fellows, stripped to the waist, and carrying pistols in broad, flat belts slung over the shoulder.

"'Come, my lads,' said I, raising my voice, as I drew a pistol from my side and cocked it, 'our time is short now; I may as well tell you that the first shot that strikes us amidship blows up the whole craft and every man on board. We are nothing less than a fireship, destined for Brest harbor to blow up the French fleet. If you are willing to make an effort for your lives, follow me.'

"The men looked aghast. Short as was the time for reflection, they felt that there were many circumstances to encourage the assertion.

"Animated now with the desire for battle, they sprang to the binnacle and seized their arms.

"In an instant the deck became a scene of excited bustle, and scarcely was the ammunition dealt out and the boarding party drawn up when the Frenchman broached-to and lashed his bowsprit to our own.

"One terrific yell burst from our fellows as they sprang from the rigging and the poop upon the astonished Frenchmen, who thought that the victory was already their own; with death and pain behind, their only hope before, they dashed forward like madmen to the fray.

"The conflict was bloody and terrific, though not a long one; nearly equal in number, but far superior in personal strength, and, stimulated by their sense of danger, our fellows rushed forward carrying all before them to the quarter-deck.

"My story is soon told now. We brought our prize safe into Malta, which we reached in five days. In less than a week our men were drafted into the different men-of-war on the station. I was appointed a warrant officer in the Sheerwater, forty-four guns; and, as the admiral opened the dispatch, the only words he spoke puzzled me for many a day after.

"'You have accomplished your orders too well,' said he; 'that privateer is but a poor compensation for the whole French navy.'

"Many years after I found out that our dispatches were false ones, intended to have fallen into the hands of the French, and mislead them as to Lord Nelson's fleet, which at that time was cruising to the southward to catch them. This of course explained what fate was destined for us—a French prison if not death; and, after all, either was fully good enough for the crew that sailed in the old Ark."—From the Works of Charles Lever.

Queen Victoria's Sight Declining.

Her majesty's eyesight is failing, and the royal oculist has frequently to be called into requisition. Her majesty has now to use very powerful spectacles when it is necessary for her to sign state documents. Blindness is hereditary in the family, for George III. suffered from it, but in his case it was supposed to have been brought on by excessive smoking. Shortness of sight seems to have suddenly affected many of the ladies and gentlemen of the court, who are now mostly armed with spectacles and eyeglasses. This acid has its use, and it is now quite the proper thing for a woman of the bedchamber or a pretty maid of honor to adjust her pincnez while conversing within or without the charmed circle.

"Tom Hope."

In an article on "Great Speeches by Eminent Men," in the Chautauquan, Harold W. George relates the following incident, which occurred at the time of Webster's great oration in reply to Hayne. Clayton, who was Webster's intimate, went to him and, after the greeting of courtesy, whispered in his ear: "Are you well charged?" Without the change of muscle, looking away with solemn glance as though he were living above that throng, Webster replied in a tone which, though sepulchral, had a hint of humor in it: "Seven fingers." Clayton knew well the meaning of that. Four fingers at that day was a heavy charge for a hunter's rifle; seven fingers—that meant great game and the determination to bag it.

JUST THE POOR MAN'S LUCK.

Usually the Person Who Can't Afford It Needs Artificial Limbs.

"There are perhaps eight hundred thousand men in this country who need artificial legs or arms, and not more than one hundred thousand of these are supplied." It was a well known maker of wooden legs who said this to a New York Sun man. He was warding off an appeal to his charity in behalf of a locomotive fireman who had slipped under his engine and been badly crippled. "The fact is," he continued, "it is always the poor man who loses a leg or an arm, now that the war is over. Excepting the crippled veterans who are kept supplied with legs by the government, nearly every man who loses a limb has to have help to get a new one."

But while the number of pensioners on account of the war continues to increase with each increase in years since that time of carnage, there is little likelihood that the number of makers of artificial legs will fall off much in number. There are nearly two hundred of them now, large and small, many of whom, having worked in one of the larger factories, set up for themselves and whittle out "timber toes" for unfortunates who cannot afford to buy one of the improved legs.

The science of making wooden legs and arms has in recent years almost supplied the place of the natural members that have been lost. There is almost no occupation now that is closed to a man on account of his crippled condition, and by the use of a rubber heel and toe it is made possible for a man to walk almost without perceptible impediment or limp in his gait. In fact, a man with both legs gone can now preserve his equilibrium and walk about almost as well as any other man.

The wood employed—wood being lighter and stronger for this purpose than any other material discovered—is willow or bass wood, and after it has been seasoned and carved into the proper form it is covered with rawhide and enamel to strengthen and finish it.

With artificial arms and hands a man may hold a fork, drive a horse, extend the arm at will and even write a fair hand. There is a case of a man who lost both hands and one foot, who now walks perfectly well and is able with his artificial hands to grasp light articles, open doors and feed himself.

A man with two artificial legs rides horseback and can mount and dismount readily, and another man has even walked a mile in sixteen minutes and fifty seconds, to beat the wooden-leg record. Skating and bicycle riding are other accomplishments and enjoyments from which some men with artificial limbs are not debarred. It is curious to note that, according to the tables of percentages, farmers are the greatest sufferers. 17 per cent. of the cases of leg amputations being found in their number, while workers at the bench number 13 per cent., laborers 8 1-2 per cent. and railroad men but 7 per cent.

Two Forms of Death.

There are two forms of physical death constantly going on in the world; says the Vegetarian—molecular death and somatic death. The first is expressed in other words by saying that the whole of the body is constantly being worn out and being renewed. Every action that we perform, every breath we draw, and every thought we think, is each accompanied by the death of a certain amount of muscular or nervous tissue, so that molecular death is a necessary part of daily life. Somatic death is the death of the entire individual, and is generally considered to take place at the moment of cessation of circulation and respiration. This is not an absolute test, however, as several well-known cases prove. Col. Townsend was a peculiar case of a man who could by the effect of his will voluntarily suspend these functions for a considerable time, while the continuation of the circulation is sometimes so difficult to determine that even the eminent anatomist Vesalius once opened an apparently dead body and found the heart still beating. A French author, Brulier, in 1742, collected records of fifty-four persons who had been wrongfully supposed to have been dead.

A New Explosive.

Chemists and others interested in the discovery and use of new explosives are now busy studying the component parts and character of an acid recently discovered by a chemist, and to which he has given the name of hydrazoic acid. This, it is claimed, is destined to make a new era in the history of explosives. The new acid has been christened hydrazoic acid from its composition, which is three parts of nitrogen and one part of hydrogen. It seems strange that in all the years that chemistry has been studied this acid has escaped discovery till now. It is described as resembling water, fuming strongly in contact with the air and causing painful wounds when applied to the skin. The acid does not seem to be itself explosive, but the salts it forms with most of the metals are described as being extremely so. It was discovered accidentally, it seems, during the course of an obscure organic investigation, and the strangeness of its properties led to an investigation, and the discovery of the exact nature of its characteristics. Few specimens exist in this country, and the acid has not been studied to any great extent.

Intelligence of the Ape.

A naturalist recently declared that we are wrong in ascribing unusual intelligence to animals of the ape species. "As it is the only animal with hands, it does many things by instinct and habit and necessity that resemble the acts of human beings and make it seem to us as if it is guided by intellect. The ape is hardly more intelligent than the dog, if, indeed, he knows as much. He has a gift for imitation and a capacity for mischief, and that is the most human part of him. But the animal that really knows the most, or is capable of being trained so as to show the most striking results of education, is the domestic pig."

SHE LOVED AN ARTIST.

And Married Him Despite Her Mother's Plans.

Mrs. Carnegie's last words had been: "For Heaven's sake, Letitia, don't let it be late again to-day!"

It was luncheon, and luncheon to men who have spent the morning on the moors is important. At 12:15, therefore, just fifteen minutes before it was necessary to start, the wagonette was, by Mrs. Carnegie's orders, at the door, the baskets put in, and Mrs. Carnegie in the breakfast room, worrying her sister, Mrs. Mainwaring, by assurances that the girls would make them late, as usual.

"Dollie was ready half an hour ago," said Mrs. Mainwaring. "I saw her in the hall."

"Dollie is not going with us. Don't distress yourself about Dollie; she is quite happy."

"How does she make herself so?"

"Oh, I don't know. We are going to be so late! She sketches, she does all kinds of things. I don't think she milks the cows, but she certainly feeds the chickens."

"You ought to know a great deal more about her than you do. There is such a thing as getting tired of gardening and feeding the chickens."

"Yes, I know, but that hasn't happened to Dollie yet, and you see going out is so much more important to the other girls. Just think, Evie is twenty-six and Agnes only a year younger."

"But Dollie is twenty-one."

"My dear, you worry me. I must do my duty to the two eldest—but I wish they would come."

"And while you are marrying them Dollie will marry herself, and probably not to your liking. In a fairy tale she would fall in love with the gardener, who would, of course, be the king's son in the ample and effectual disguise of a shabby coat and cap."

"Oh, Cecelia! Dollie is not a girl of that kind. She is as good as gold, and perfectly lovable, and she shall go everywhere when Evie gets engaged. Has it struck you that Sir Philip is in love with Evie? I am almost certain that he is, and I am delighted. Oh, here the girls come. How charming they both look!"

"And what have you been doing this afternoon, Dollie?" asked Mrs. Mainwaring at tea time.

Dollie blushed (her aunt thought because it was so unusual for anyone to take any interest in her employments), and said: "Sketching in the glen, aunt."

"And you had a dull little luncheon all alone by yourself in that great dining-room?"

"No, I was working so hard that I could not spare time to come in. I ate all the bread I had taken with me to rub out with. I wish you would come to the glen, aunt; it is so pretty."

"Dear child, I am much too old to scramble. May I see your sketch?"

Dollie brought it. Her mother looked at it, too, and was startled at its merit.

"Why, Dollie!" she exclaimed, "you have improved wonderfully! That bit in the left-hand corner is excellent."

Again Dollie colored. "I had some help there, mother," she said, "an artist who comes to the glen sometimes—"

"An artist, Dollie! What do you mean?"

"I mean a gentleman, mother. He strayed in by accident three weeks ago, when I was there painting. He has often been to work there since, and whenever he comes he gives me really beautiful hints. He has taught me—"

Here her mother's attention was distracted by a servant with a message, and Mrs. Mainwaring finished Dollie's sentence for her. "To color, my dear. Yes, I see that he has taught you to do that!" She was not, however, looking at the sketch, but at her niece's rosy cheeks.

"Take care that he is not teaching her how to fall in love," said Mrs. Mainwaring.

"I will—I really will. Just now it is hard to attend to anything but Evie and Sir Philip, but when the business is settled Dollie shall always be with me. Did you see how he watched Evie at luncheon?"

"No, I thought he was rather vexed or disappointed about something."

"I hope not. Evie may perhaps have been making some of her stupid speeches. But he loves her, I am sure. I am so happy about it that I am not able to think of anything else."

From Dollie she learned that the landscape painter's name was Fleming, that he was young, good-looking and clever, lived in Edinburgh, was quite a gentleman and not at all the kind of man that Aunt Cecelia seemed to imagine.

Being informed that Dollie had been forbidden to go there, Mrs. Mainwaring advised her sister to assure herself that Dollie had understood and was obeying this order. This Mrs. Carnegie did, and then once more gave her whole mind to Sir Philip and Evie. Why did he not propose? The day of his departure was drawing very near.

It came two days earlier than had been anticipated. A rich old bachelor, uncle of Sir Philip, who was then in Sunderlandshire, dispatched this telegram to him:

"Am ill and must have rest. Come at once and help me or I shall die outright. Why are you so long in arriving?"

Ten minutes after the telegram came Sir Philip followed Mr. Carnegie to the study—a study in which no book was ever opened but that which he had gone to fetch—Bradshaw. Mrs. Carnegie thought she knew what Sir Philip had gone to do and tried to be patient while she awaited the result.

In a quarter of an hour her husband came and said: "My dear, I have had a great surprise—a very great surprise—it almost amounted to a shock."

"What nonsense, Charles! You must have known what was coming."

"Why should I? You didn't."

"Indeed, I did. I have known for ten days that Sir Philip wanted to marry Evie."

"But he doesn't—it is Dollie."

Even if Sir Philip did happen to be in love with the young daughter he was still Sir Philip; so after Mrs. Carnegie was sufficiently recovered to fit a new heroine into the romance in which she was so much interested she sent out emissaries in search of Dollie.

No one could find her, until at last an under-gardener, being much pressed by Mrs. Carnegie herself, said, with evident reluctance, that Miss Dollie might perhaps, he thought, be painting in Ladywell wood.

To reach this wood a cornfield had to be traversed, and just as Mrs. Carnegie was half across it she saw Dollie in the distance, bidding farewell to a gentleman with a sketching bag on his back. The unhappy lady stopped short in horror.

"Dollie," she exclaimed, "this is shameful! I have been trusting you all this time, and you, it seems, have been breaking your word?"

"Oh, no, I have not! I have not been near the glen, and I have never seen Mr. Fleming until this morning. Don't look that way, mother; I am speaking the truth. I was on my way to tell you all about it."

"Tell me nothing of that kind! I want to know nothing."

"But you must know, mother—you will be forced to know. Mr. Fleming has asked me to marry him and I have said I will."

"You have! Well, girls do stupid things sometimes, but the sooner you undo this the better!"

"Mother," Dollie began, but her voice failed her.

"Make no appeal to me, Dollie. I am sorry for you, of course, if you care; but you won't care long. Be a good girl and do your best to dismiss this from your mind at once and forever, and go to your room now and write and tell that man that you intend to do so."

"Where is Dollie?" asked Mr. Carnegie when he and Sir Philip came.

"She was here a few minutes ago, but she has been sketching in the sun and it has been too much for her. She had to go to bed with a frightfully bad headache."

"Then I shall not see her unless I stay till to-morrow," said Sir Philip, after expressing much sympathy.

"Oh, you must not do that—you must not offend your uncle; besides Dollie may not be well enough to see you to-morrow."

Sir Philip departed and Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie repaired to the study to write to Mr. Fleming.

Their daughter, they said, might have been temporarily led away by persuasion, but now

ON Wednesday President Cleveland signed the repeal bill.

LET each good Democrat on election and use his best endeavors towards getting out every Democratic vote.

THE success of the Democratic county ticket depends on getting out the Democratic vote. If every Democrat goes to the polls there is no question of Democratic success.

IN the country districts where voters have several miles to go to the polls, Democrats who have teams and vehicles should see that their neighbors who are not so fortunate, are taken to the polls.

THERE should be no cutting of the ticket by Democrats this year. Every candidate on our county ticket is worthy of the support of every Democrat and is entitled to your vote. Make no mistake, but vote a ringer.

THE great Mosque of Damascus was burned to the ground October 14 with all the adjacent streets. The loss is estimated at $5,000,000. The Sultan has contributed $2,500,000 to help rebuild the Mosque and to relieve the poorer sufferers.

IT might be well enough for Democrats through the county, who occasionally indulge in a smile to inquire where their liquor comes from. If a wholesale liquor dealer from afar undertakes to use his business against the Democrats, why not try some other brand. Touch his pocketbook is the way to scotch the snake.

IN almost every freight train wreck someone is killed who is stealing a ride. Trips are made between distant cities in this way by men who are not able to pay fare on passengar trains. In a freight wreck on the Pennsylvania railroad, within the corporation limits of the city of Harrisburg, on last Wednesday evening, four men were killed and one injured. They had boarded the train a few minutes before and were in a coal car.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND on Tuesday granted an application for the pardon of Franklin W. Hull, of Pennsylvania, convicted of aiding and abetting the appropriation of the funds of a national bank and sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the Eastern penitentiary at Philadelphia, giving his reasons for granting the pardon that eminent surgeons certify that an operation is necessary to save the remaining sight of this convict.

IT is amusing to read the Republican papers, all charging the hard times on the Democratic administration. It may be that their Republican readers are too stupid to know they are still living and earning their bread under the operations of the McKinley tariff law, but we imagine some of them have got their eyes open by this time. The first law passed by Congress under Democratic rule is the repeal of the Sherman law which will be a start for the better, the revision of the McKinley tariff will come next and then if business does not brighten up the Democracy may feel that they are mistaken in their policy.

THE editor of the Gosling is again threatened with spasms over the printing of the ballots. The symtoms appeared suddenly and were superinduced by the failure of the election proclamation to appear in the Gosling. Knowing that the law prescribed the publication of the proclamation by the sheriff in at least one Republican and one Democratic paper, the editor of the Gosling made great preparations for spreading the proclamation before its readers as the Republican organ. But as the paper is only recognized by the Republicans as a gosling, the preparations came to naught and the editor of the Gosling worked off the matter this week as a specimen ballot. The Gosling's editor is suffering from a bad case of "big head."

HENRY CLEWS, the New York banker, makes the following prediction: "The great banks of Europe now hold $750,000,000 in gold, and other banks $250,000,000 more, making $1,000,000,000. Most of this belongs to depositors and is now absolutely idle. When our money is put into solid shape, as will be by the repeal clause of the Sherman law, this country will act as a powerful magnet to draw an important part of that hoard of metal to this side, and this country is really the only place that holds out promise to make good and profitable investments. The doors are closed against Australia, India, South America, Russia, Spain, Egypt and Turkey, and France has at no time since the battle of Waterloo wanted English investment connection less than now, so that England's great hoard of money can only be profitably and safely invested in this country, and, my word for it, it will soon come in prodigious quantities."

As the election occurs only five days hence, it is important that voters should become acquainted with the changes made in the manner of voting.

The new ballot law of this commonwealth makes the act of voting simplicity itself for the voter, doing away with, or throwing upon the election officers many of the puzzling details that have made so much trouble under the system of other states.

Under the new system all a voter who wishes to vote a straight party ticket has to do is to walk into the booth and prepare his ballot by marking a cross in the circle at the head of the party ticket, then refold the ballot just as it was given him and walk out and hand it to the election officer appointed to receive it. One little mark does the whole business. The election officer folds the ballot properly before giving it to the voter, and when it is returned to him numbers the ballot in the corner and covers the number by passing down the corner, as provided by the law, before depositing it in the box. No one need worry himself a bit as to his ability to mark a ballot correctly at the next election, provided he votes a straight ticket, for all he needs to notice which is his party ticket and put a cross in the circle at the top of the ticket.

The voter who wishes to split his ticket, or who wishes to vote for only a portion of the officers to be elected, will proceed in the same way he did last year by marking a cross opposite the name of each candidate for whom he wishes to vote, and not make any mark in the circle at the top of the ticket.

In this county, of course every Democrat will simply put an X mark in the circle at the top of his straight ticket. Populists and anti-ring Republicans can either vote the whole Democratic ticket in the same way or put an X after names of such candidates as they prefer.

CARTER H. HARRISON, mayor of Chicago, was shot and killed in his home in that city on Saturday evening about 8 o'clock, by Patrick Eugene Pendergast, a crank who imagined the mayor had wronged him by not appointing him to the office of corporation counsel. Pendergast called at the mayor's residence and met him in the hall and at once pulled his revoiver and began firing. The first shot struck the mayor in the right breast and would have been fatal but the assassin continued his murderous work and fired two more one penetrating the stomach and the other striking him on the left hand. Harrison died in a few minutes after the first shot. Pendergast made his escape from the house but afterwards gave himself up to the police and is locked up. In Chicago there is a universal feeling of sorrow and horror and for a time public indignation threatened to vent itself in the lynching of the assassin. The closing program for the last days of the World's Fair was changed and instead of the grand closing scenes intended the city is in mourning over the death of her chief magistrate.

THE Gosling says:

A very economical spell was taken this year by Dillon and Kirby over the publication of the sheriff's proclamation, which is necessary for the public to see in order to vote intelligently. It is published in only two papers and the tax-paying voter not taking either of them is left in darkness. This streak of economy was practiced because the sheriff being a Republican, would have inserted in at least four papers, the majority of which may have been Republican papers.

If the editor of the Gosling knew enough to look at the election laws and had brains enough to understand what he reads, he would know that Dillon and Kirby have nothing to do with the publication of the Sheriff's proclamation whatever—it belongs to the duties of the Sheriff's office. It is a little rough on the profession to be required to reply to such nonsense but there may be some benignted readers of the Gosling who are as ignorant of the election laws as the editor and for their benefit we make the statement.

LIKE the sick sinner, the beneficiaries of the McKinley tariff who have just been pleading before the ways and means committee are fertile in good promises to the laboring man. "If you reduce the tariff," they say, "we shall have to cut wages or shut up shop." But these sanctimonious friends of labor have short memories. They obtained the present rates of duty because, they said, they wanted to pay better wages to their workmen. "American wages to American workmen" was the shibboleth of the campaign. But they forgot their promises when they got what they asked for. They continued to hire their workmen for the lowest wages possible. They continued to import Bohemians and Italians to put them in places of the American workmen, who they pretended to love so well. They have not raised wages, but have lowered them. They will do the same in the future whenever possible, tariff or no tariff.

AT the election next Tuesday, every Democrat in Cambria county can vote the straight ticket with the full satisfaction of knowing that he is voting for good, capable men, in every way qualified for the offices for which they are candidates. It is not a ticket set up by political bosses with the idea of keeping the offices in one family, but a ticket in which every candidate has been selected because he is the choice of the party for that particular office. Voters of the Republican party, who have grown tired of being dominated by ring rule and of keeping one family continually at the public crib will find in the Democratic candidates, men worthy of their suffrages and by casting a vote for them will assist in disenthralling their party from the grasp of men who will never be satisfied as long as there is an office that they cannot control and enjoy themselves.

ON Tuesday next every Democrat should vote a ringer.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 27, 1893. Senator Voorhees is proud, as he has a right to be, of the great victory he has won, and he is all the prouder that it was won without the use of cloture.

Unless the Republican Senators shall introduce some new and unnecessary complication into the situation the vicious purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law, for which not one word of praise or defense has been uttered during the long and memorable silver debate in the Senate, will be wiped from the Statute books within less than a week.

The silver Senators, after making as strong a fight as was ever made in Congress for anything, to get the bill amended so as to continue the coinage of silver, found that it was impossible to agree upon any amendments that could be passed, and once realizing that they announced their willingness to allow a vote to be taken after the purposed amendments shall have been debated and voted upon. These amendments present about all of the financial ideas and each of them will have special defenders and will secure some votes, but it will not be surprising if, after having put themselves on record by casting their votes for what they consider would have improved the bill, four-fifths of the Senate should, on the final vote, support the Voorhees bill. My reason for expecting such a large vote for the bill is that nearly every Senator who spoke expressed the opinion that the purchasing law should be repealed.

Already there are indications on the part of the Republican Senators to make trouble. Senator Sherman while professing to be a strong unconditional repealer is busy trying to complicate matters by getting supporters for an amendment providing for an issue of bonds. Inasmuch as Senator Voorhees had told Mr. Sherman that he considered it unwise to interject the bond issue, which is opposed by many Democratic Senators, into the question, it looks as though Senators, were trying to create Democratic dissention rather than to secure repeal.

Many outrageous misrepresentations have been sent out from Washington concerning the attitude of Democratic Senators towards President Cleveland, on account of the failure of the compromise proposed by a committee of Democratic Senators. President Cleveland has been consistent all through the long contest. He has always believed that the Voorhees bill would in the end be passed and has at no time even intimmated that he would endorse or in anyway help to bring about a compromise. All statements to the contrary are purely imaginary. The Democratic senators who proposed the compromise were equally honest; they thought that the President would sign a compromise measure if it received the vote of every Democratic Senator, and there is little doubt that he would have done so, but none of them ever claimed that the President had told them so. The compromise was not endorsed by all of the Democratic Senators and it was abandoned. That is the whole story without coloring.

Representatives Turpin, of Alabama, and Black, of Illinois, are working hard to get a report from the House Committee on banking and currency in favor of the bill introduced by the former to repeal the law prohibiting the loaning of money on real estate by the National banks, and they are hopeful of success. Mr. Turpin says English and Scotch financial syndicates now monopolize the loaning of money of real estate in his section because of the existence of this law and that his people think it would be much better to keep the interest money at home. The bill will have a hard road to travel even if it gets favorably reported to the House.

Reform is the watchword of the Democrats in the House. This week they passed the public printing bill which is the result of a long and careful investigation by the printing committee and reforms, not a single abuse, but a large number of them, connected with the printing and distribution of public documents. This bill, if it becomes a law, as it probably will, will make a material reduction in the cost of certain lines of public printing simply by shutting off the waste.

The officials of the National Association of Democratic clubs have secured reduced railroad rates for Democratic voters in the states of New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Virginia, and Maryland who are temporarily residing in Washington and will use their utmost efforts to see that they all go home to vote at the coming state elections. M.

A Big Job on Hand.

It cost $30,000,000 to make the World's Fair. The officials would like to know just how much it will take to unmake it. The fair officials are under a bond of $100,000 to have all the buildings and other appurtenances of the fair removed and the park returned to its former condition by January 1, 1894.

To do this is now practically impossible and they have asked the park commissioners for at least six months' extension of the time, and if possible twelve months. The request will be granted probably, but there are other difficulties. The buildings are so large that it will be an expensive and in some particulars a dangerous task to tear them down. Contractors who have looked at the Manufacturer's building, which covers 34 acres, says the man who razes it will have to be skillful as the architect who planned it. Still there will be more salvage from the Manufacturers' building than from any other. Many contractors say there is very little material in the buildings worth handling.

Minister Publicly Whipped.

WINMAC, Ind., Oct. 30.—People here were shocked this morning to see Rev. J. Orten, a Presbyterian minister of this city, publicly horse-whipped. At services last night Moss and John Thompson, aged 18 and 19 respectively, were laughing and talking in church. This morning when Rev. Orten went to the post-office for his mail, the boys were there, and Moss began to whip him with a large blacksnake whip. Seeing his peril, the minister started to run down Main street, and at every step for a block and a half he was cut with the long lash. Moss and Thompson are sons of prominent citizens. The boys were arrested. There is much excitement over the affair.

A Horrible Accident.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 30.—One of the most peculiar accidents as well as one of the most horrible accidents that ever occurs in this state has just come to light at Ada, Ark. Several days ago the child of Mr. J. H. Harkey, who operates a cotton gin at that place, mysteriously disappeared. After a long search for the missing child Mr. Harkey remembered he had last saw the little fellow playing around the ginhouse. He at once began ripping the ties from the bales of cotten in the gin, and found the child crushed in the cotton of a bale which had been pressed a few days before. How the unfortunate child managed to fall in the cotton press unobserved is a mystery.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Kept Everybody at Bay.

NEW YORK, October 31.—Frederick L. Matthews of 119 South Second street, Brooklyn, clerk for George Edward Harding & Gooch, architects of the new building which the Postal Telegraph Company is erecting at Broadway and Murray street, was shot in the abdomen yesterday, but not fatally, by James Bradley, an insane tramp. Bradley then unknown, poorly clad and wasted in figure, crept into the building yesterday morning and concealed himself in the small space between a pile of terra cotta piping and the North wall on the floor. The man's face was emanciated and sallow, and his small expressionless eyes were sunk far back in his head. He weighed little more than 100 pounds, and walked with a feeble gait. But the strength of frenzy kept him master of the situation for almost a quarter of an hour in the afternoon, when 1,500 people watched the 12 or more policemen who were endeavoring to oust him from the building after he had shot Mathews. There was a bulldog revolver in the pocket of his ragged trousers, with enough cartridges to keep its five barrels filled, and he used it with desperation. The police finally got the better of him and he was locked up.

A Pacific Mail Steamer Wrecked.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct., 26.—The Pacific Mail steamship City of New York, which sailed from this port this afternoon, went on the rocks at Point Bonito in a dense fog. She will probably be a total wreck. Point Bonita is at the entrance of the Golden Gate on the northern side.

The cargo will be jettisoned to-night, but most of it will be a total loss. Experts put the value of the vessel and cargo at half a million.

The vessel, 2,000 tons, and built in 1875 at Chester, and rebuilt a few years ago. She was very staunch and swift. Captain Johnson commanded her. Among her cargo were 16,127 barrels of flour and 14,547 pounds of beans for China, 1,225 barrels of flour for Japan, as well as canned goods and groceries for both places and for Batabia.

They also carried a large and valuable cargo of dried shrimps and other Chinese supplies, forwarded by Mongolian merchants to China. Of treasure she carried $191,290 for China and Japan, of which three-quarters was Mexican dollars. The total value of the cargo was $132,000, which added to the treasure, makes $323,290. The vessel valued at $300,000. There is no insurance on her.

A Big Circus Steal.

BOSTON, October 31. A special from Bridgeport, Conn., says: "It is a practical certainty that the Forepaugh show, of which James A. Bailey is the owner, will not again go on the road, at least under the proprietorship of Mr. Bailey. Mr. Bailey says that nearly $100,000 has been stolen from him in the Forepaugh show, and that he has discovered that there has been a conspiracy which included employes in all departments from the ticket wagon to door tenders and ushers. Only through such a combination would it have been possible for such wholesale thievery to be committed. It is said that Manager McCadden and Secretary Evans are free from suspicion, but as the result of what Mr. Bailey has discovered a number of arrests may be made any day. Mr. Bailey has positively declared his intention of not sending the Forepaugh show out again.

A $25,000 Fire.

WILLIAMSPORT, October 31—The machine and wood working department of the Williamsport Furniture company was damaged by fire to-night to the extent of $25,000 or $30,000. The flames raged stubbornly for over three hours before being subdued, and the great plant, worth $150,000, narrowly escaped destruction. The fire will throw 250 men out of employment, who have been constantly laid off since July as a result of the hard times, the factory having just started up. The wood working department will be almost a total loss, as the interior is badly burned and the valuable machines drenched with water. The plant consists of a series of three and four story buildings and manufactures the finest of furniture. The loss is covered by insurance.

A Fatal Fire.

NEW YORK, October 31.—At 5 o'clock this morning the boarding house of Mrs. Mary McGee, on Cornet alley, east end, was discovered in flames. When the landlady and her boarders were aroused all means of escape by the stairs was cut off. Mrs. McGee leaped with her infant child in her arms from a second story window and was badly bruised and cut. The baby's skull was fractured and it will die. Peter McDermott also jumped from the window, fracturing his thigh, and Owen Maloney fell fracturing his skull. The other boarders, six in number, were rescued by the firemen. The house with its contents was destroyed. Loss $2,500. The origin of the fire is not known.

A Hundred Plundering Indians.

WASHINGTON, October 31.—Indian Commissioner Browning has received the following telegram from Agent Treon, of the Crow Creek and Lower Brule agency in South Dakota: "One hundred Indians left White River three weeks ago, went plundering through the country, took possession of Old Fort Randall and refused to return, sent police force, farmers and interpreters. A lively skirmish took place. No one hurt. Indians scattered but were captured, disarmed and brought to agency. Remove them to reservation to-morrow and hold them as prisoners. Much credit due clerks, farmers, interpreters and police."

Plunder of Car Thieves.

COLUMBUS, O., October 31.—A sensation was caused here to-day by the arrest of Leo C. Lesquereux, son of one of the most prominent jewelers of the city, on a charge of concealing stolen goods. A gang of car thieves was broken up last night and one of the men arrested told officers that the plunder was deposited at Lesquereux's house. Investigation revealed the fact that his stable was packed with goods that were subsequently claimed by the Columbus, Hocking Valley & Toledo railway company. Lesquereux is 25 years old and is a nephew of the scientist of that name who died here two years ago.

Non-pull-out

is an arbitrary word used to designate the only bow (ring) which cannot be pulled off the watch.

Here's the idea

The bow has a groove on each end. A collar runs down inside the pendant (stem) and fits into the grooves, firmly locking the bow to the pendant, so that it cannot be pulled or twisted off.

It positively prevents the loss of the watch by theft, and avoids injury to it from dropping.

IT CAN ONLY BE HAD with Jas. Boss Filled or other watch cases bearing this trade mark——

All watch dealers sell them without extra cost. A watch case opener will be sent free to any one by the manufacturers.

As the last car of Pacific passed him Wolf stepped out to the east-bound track, not noticing engine 408 which was following the express and which struck him on the head, crushing his skull and killing him instantly, his neck also being broken. He was about 38 years of age and his home was in Pittsburg.

—A wonderful series of freaks of lightning is just reported by Miller Luke F. Patterson, who is located several miles from Uniontown, Pa. Several nights ago an electric bolt entered his mill by way of a brace wire from a tall tree, exploded the dust in the mill and sent missiles flying through the roof, prostrated R. F. Moore, who was about to open and enter the door; twisted or warped every bolt or bit of iron in the mill and caused $5,000 damage. Then the lightning, as it left the mill, followed a wire fence adjoining for 150 yards and killed a sow and a litter of pigs that were lying along the fence, finally paralyzing a son of Moore, the man striken at the mill door.

—On Sunday night about half past ten o'clock a dwelling house situated at Flynn's curve on the Pennsylvania railroad between Portage and Wilmore, occupied by two families named Hammers and Plummer, caught fire. Both families had retired and all had been asleep for some time when a child of the Plummers got awake, and noticing that the room was full of smoke, awakened the other members of the family, who also awakened the Hammers family. Both families escaped and succeeded in saving some of their furniture, but as there were no means at hand to fight the fire the house burned down. The house was a large frame structure and belonged to Mrs. Flynn, of Altoona.

—In the United States circuit court at Pittsburg on Tuesday Attorney Knox, representing the South Fork Fishing Club in the suit for damages in the case of which Mrs. Ann Jenkins, of Youngstown, O., is plaintiff, requested a continuance of the case on account of the absence in Europe of Attorney D. Watson, of the defense. State Senator Wolcott, of Ohio, for the prosecution, argued against the continuance. Judge Acheson, however, granted a continuance of the case to the May term of court. Mrs. Jenkins asks damages amounting to $25,000 for the death of a father, mother, brother and her shattered health, the result of the flood disaster at Johnstown, the responsibility for which is charged against the South Fork Fishing Club.

—The Gosling, in an article this week on the printing of the ballots, in its head lines tries to create the impression that Commissioners Dillon and Kirby gave the publication of the election proclamation to to FREEMAN. The law makes it the business and duty of the the sheriff to make publication of the proclamation in at least two newspapers "representing as far as practicable the political parties which at the preceding election cast the largest and next largest number of votes." As a consequence Commissioners Dillon and Kirby had nothing to do with giving out the publication of the election proclamation, and if it appears in the FREEMAN and not in the Gosling it is because the sheriff considers the FREEMAN represents one political party while some other paper is a better representative of the other party than the Gosling.

A Lie Nailed.

When Commissioner Lloyd arrived home the other day from a trip to the World's Fair he was very much surprised to find that the ballot printing had been given out during his absence in the same manner and by the same genial dispensers of the public funds as last year. On both occasions he had insisted that a letting should be held, but being in the minority was powerless to act.—Gosling.

The above is not true for the reason that Commissioner Lloyd knew that the printing of the ballots had been given out before he started for the World's Fair.

And further, the minutes of the Commissioners office will show whether Mr. Lloyd insisted on having a letting or not.

The minutes, at the time the printing of the ballots for last year was given out show that Mr. Lloyd not only did not insist that a letting should be held but that he made no objection whatever. Mr. Gosling confine yourself to the truth. Don't lie the week before the election. Taxpayers can go to the commissioners' office and see for themselves when Mr. Lloyd insisted on having a letting and when he did not.

Signs of the Times.

The leaves in the forest are beginning to turn yellow and brown, and to drop off one by one, presaging the approach of autumn and bringing with it many climatic changes. It needs a very strong constitution to withstand the sudden shocks of cold and moisture. Unfortunately there are very few so gifted, the majority of the human race need to have their natures strengthened and stimulated, and there is no better remedial agent than a pure rye whiskey. Klein's Silver Age Rye has stood the severest tests and has been found to be absolutely perfect, being recommended and prescribed by the highest medical authorities. It is for sale by dealers generally at $1.50 per full quart; Duquesne Rye at $1.25 per quart, and Bear Creek at $1.00 per quart are highly recommended. Signs Indicate a Severe Winter.

A weather prognosticator issues his proclamation in regard to the coming winter, which he says will be a terror, with deep snows and cold weather. He bases his prediction on natural signs. He says the meadow moles are burrowing deeper this year than for the last thirty years. The "melt" of the hogs is whiter than common, which means much snow and ice. The hair on horses' fetlocks is longer and thicker than common. The squirrels are laying up bigger stores of food than usual; corn husks are remarkably thick, as are the onion skins. There is more moss on the hickory saplings and spruce trees, which is a sure sign. The goose bone says the same thing, and the pin feathers on chickens are more numerous than for years.

Reade Township Items.

William McKee, an apprentice in Christian Walters' roller mill, met with what might have been a serious accident one day last week. He was working in the mill when his clothes in some manner got caught in the large cog wheels, completely stripping him of his clothing until his pocket-knife, etc., came into the cogs, stopping the machinery. He was taken out with many bruises and pinches, but none of them are serious.

The McKinley law has proved to be a failure as this generation never saw wool so low as it is now. All the protection we want on wool is to kill off all the dogs.

Congressman Hicks threw down the shovel and the hoe at Washington, D. C., recently and came here last week and stumped Reade township. He told us exactly what we have been reading in the papers for months past and wound up by resurrecting McGinty.

Geo. Allen Ricketts is teaching his first term of school at Cambria Mills, in this township, and reports that he is getting along A No. 1.

John Ricketts' family now numbers seven—four boys and three girls. The youngest is a little daughter which came into the world last Friday. Mother and child are getting along nicely.

Hon. M. Fitzharris, of Gallitzin, made some pleasant calls recently on his Democratic friends in this section.

Mr. Bengele, the Democratic candidate for county treasurer, was circulating among his friends here one day recently, but as his time was limited he expects to call on us soon again and see all his friends.

Fall Fashions For Ladies.

The latest fashion news from Paris all agree in saying that the "Godets" styles of circular drapery, in new and endless variations, will be most extensively worn this season. Skirts, cases, jackets and collars all partake of this tendency.

The old time panier is revived for certain full dress toilettes.

The round waist of the Spring and Summer is still a favorite, with the addition of circular, or "Godets" hip cross skirts, in varied designs.

These items of news are extracted from the McDowell Fashion journals, and will undoubtedly be of interest to our fair readers, for the aim of these handsome Parisian publications is to always present their customers the only correct and refined styles adopted by the gentlewomen of Paris, which is acknowledged to be the fountain head of fashions. "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion" cost only $3.50 a year, each, or 35 cts. a copy. "The French Dressmaker" is $3.00 per annum, or 30 cts, a copy; "La Mode" costs only $1.50 a year, of 15 cents a copy, which makes it the most economical family journal of fashion in existence. If you are unable to procure any of these publications at your news dealers, do not accept any substitute, but apply directly to Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

What Next?

The Gosling this week is trying to create the impression that Messrs. Kirby and Dillon, the Democratic members of the board of commissioners have been awarding contracts without the knowledge of Mr. Lloyd, the Republican member of the board. The following affidavit will dispose of the Gosling's efforts to beguile the voters of Cambria.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, }
COUNTY OF CAMBRIA. }

Be it known that on the date hereof, before me, an alderman for the city of Johnstown, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, personally appeared P. E. Dillon and John Kirby, county commissioners of Cambria county, who being duly sworn according to law, did depose and say that since the organization of the board of county commissioners in January, A. D. 1891, that no public or private letting was given to any person without the full knowledge and consent of J. G. Lloyd, Republican county commissioner, and all contracts heretofore awarded, were agreed to by J. G. Lloyd except the printing of the ballots for the November election, 1893.

A Family Reunion.

The Senior Flick Brothers held a reunion at the home of George Flick, at Carrolltown, on Thursday last. There were present John, aged 80; Charles, 77; Martin, 75; George, 70; Peter 65 and Francis 63. The sum of their ages is 430 years. The brothers are all in good health and bid fair to live many more years. E. H. Flick, Esq., City Solicitor for Altoona, and Dr. Lawrence Flick, of Philadelphia, sons of John were present. Dr. Lawrence is somewhat of an artist, as well as a historian, and made pictures of the six brothers. A number of these will be distributed among the friends. Probably there are not six brothers of this age living in the state, possibly the United States. —Carrolltown News.

ZEBRAS IN HARNESS.

Experiments in Domesticating the Queer Little Animals.

They Are Thought to Be Better Than Mules for Certain Purposes in Africa—Correction of a Mistaken Notion.

The prevalent notion about the zebra is that it is so untamable as to be of no practical use to man. Experiments show that this is an erroneous notion. In a number of instances it has been reduced to docility in Europe, but no attempt has been made to impress it into the serviceable bondage with which we are familiar in the horse. That complete tractability for the purpose of labor is not impossible, and is, indeed, hopeful, is being shown in the Transvaal, where a firm engaged in the coaching business between Pretoria and Fort Tuli, in Mashonaland, have actually eight zebras in harness and four of them regularly employed in drawing a coach. These animals were capturned by the lasso, and in a few months four had been so trained that they were perfectly quiet and willing in harness, while the others are becoming habituated to restraint and will in time be fully under control. H. Stephens, who gives an account of the experiment in the Field, says Messrs. Seedesberg are thus far satisfied and will endeavor to substitute zebras for mules in dragging their coaches. These very graceful striped quadrupeds are no doubt fleeter of foot than the mule and perhaps as swift as the horse, but there is an important superiority over both that they possess. They enjoy absolute immunity from that very fatal ailment of South Africa vaguely called horse sickness, which in a single night in low country kills a horse or mule turned out on the veldt. The loss from this cause is a heavy item in the expenses of a South African livery stable. It is found that the zebra does not kick and is gently amenable to the rein by having a soft mouth. A tendency to bite is the one vice they have, but this they cease to practice when not afraid of being hurt.

It is the intention of the firm to attempt cross-breeding with horses. The result will be awaited with considerable interest. A new hybrid of hopeful stamina and qualities for harness or the saddle may confidently be expected, and perhaps the somber uncouthness of the cross between the horse and ass will be overcome and replaced by graces of form and charms of color. It seems strange that it should be left until to-day to essay the domestication of the zebra. The horse and ass have so long been pressed into service that the original habitat of both is disputed. They either come from Asia or Africa. But the fossil horse is also found in America, and some of the types go so far back in geological time as to suggest that the horse had its origin on the American continent. But when Columbus landed the horse was unknown and all the troops of wild coursers have descended from domesticated breeds which have escaped from control. South Africa produces not only the zebra, but the quagga and the dauw, congeners which might also prove of use in crossing. Both have been domesticated but the experiment has not been carried to practical utility. The opportunity to introduce the quagga as a hybrid or pure bred has almost been lost, as the animal is either extinct or very scarce. The dauw is adapted to life on the plains and still roams in great herds north of the Orange river.

GREATEST MENACE TO FORESTS.

Making of Paper from Wood Causes Wholesale Destruction of Trees.

The extensive use of wood in making the cheapest grades of paper offers one of the serious obstacles to forest preservation, says the Philadelphia Telegraph. In the last two or three years the growth of the wood-pulp industry has been enormous, a dozen great mills, each manufacturing from fifty to three hundred tons of pulp a day, have been built on the Hudson river, to feed principally on the Adirondack forests. The wood chiefly used is spruce, and the especially disastrous effect, of the industry on the forests results not only from the extreme demand for the lumber, but from the fact that while the demand is especially for trees of thirty to thirty-five years growth, the young trees are also cut. In 1887 the capacity of the pulp mills of the United States was about seventy-two thousand tons per annum. The present capacity is seven hundred thousand tons.

And in this remarkable growth the industry has been accompanied by these three desirable things: Increase in quantity, decrease in price, and no diminution in the compensation of labor. The sound of the ax, the barker and the grinder is heard in twenty-two states. The neighborhood of Niagara and the Adirondacks in New York, the territories of the Kennebec, Androscoggin and Penobscot rivers in Maine, the Fox river valley of Wisconsin, the hills of New Hampshire and Vermont and the natural gas belt of Indiana are the greatest pulp-producing regions of the United States. About thirty-five hundred cords of wood are required daily to supply the demand of the mills.

THE FIRST.

THE first ship was brought from Egypt to Greece by Danaus in 1385 B. C. The first double-decked ship was built by the Tyrians, 786 B. C.

THE first glass bottle in the world was made by the Romans about the year 70 A. D. The first made in England appeared about 1558.

THE first playbill was issued from Drury Lane theater on April 8, 1663, and the piece represented was the "Humorous Lieutenant."

THE first woolen clothing made in England was manufactured about 1330, though it was not dyed and dressed by our countrymen until 1667.

THE first voyage round the world was made in the Vittoria, a ship which formed part of the expedition that sailed under Magellan in 1519.

THE first street paved in London for the use of foot passengers was York street, leading from the north side of St. James square to Jermyn street.

THE first toll-gate originated in 1267, the sum of one penny being exacted for every wagon that passed through a certain manor in Northumberland.

THE first trousers in their present shape were introduced into the British army in 1813, and tolerated as a legitimate portion of evening dress in 1816.

IN COLLEGE AND SCHOOL.

EX-MINISTER E. J. PHELPS is again on the list of Yale's law lecturers.

AN elective course in swimming has recently been opened to the juniors at Vassar.

WITHOUT an exception Princeton's handsomest building when completed will be the new Commencement hall, the gift of Mrs. Charles Alexander, of New York. The building will cost upward of $300,000.

COL. AMOS A. PARKER, who recently died in Keene, N. H., at the age of over 101 years, is said to have been undoubtedly the oldest college graduate in the United States. He took his diploma from the university of Vermont in 1813.

ARTIFICIAL PEARLS.

The Highly Ingenious Chinese Method of Producing Gems to Suit.

The processes by which the Chinese produce artificial pearls are as remarkable as they are ingenious, says the Washington Star. This business constitutes quite an important industry. It is confined to two villages in the northern province of Chihkiang, which is in a silk-producing region. In the months of May and June large quantities of mussels are brought in baskets from a lake thirty miles distant, and the biggest of the mollusks are selected for the operation that is to be performed.

Into the shell of each mussel is introduced a number of small objects which it is intended that the bivalve shall coat with the pearly substance it secretes. Sometimes little pills of earth are used. Such pellets are made of mud, taken from the bottom of water courses, dried and powdered with the juice of camphor-tree seeds. In the same way are employed diminutive images, usually of Buddha, but often of fishes. They are made of lead, cast very thin by pouring the molten metal upon a board which is carved with the impressions.

To place these nuclei inside of the mussels is a process of no little delicacy. The shell is usually opened with a small instrument of mother-of-pearl, and the mantle of the animal if gently lifted. At the same time the images or pills are laid in two rows beneath the mantle. The shell is then permitted to close. Finally the mollusks are deposited in canals or pools five or six inches apart, at depths of from two to five feet in lots of 5,000 to 50,000.

In November the mussels are collected and opened. The animals are removed from the shells and the pellets or images are detached by a sharp knife. By this time they are fastened tightly to the inner surface of the shells and have become covered with a coating of nacre. The next process is to cut away the matrices of earth or lead about which the artificial pearls have formed. Into the cavity thus made in each one is poured melted yellow resin, and the orifice is artfully covered over by a piece of mother-of-pearl.

The pearls formed about the earthen pellets are flat on the bottom and in shape are somewhat more than hemispheres. They have much of the luster and beauty of the real gems, and are sold at a rate so cheap as to be procurable by all who care to possess them. They are employed to a considerable extent by jewelers, who set them in tiaras and various ornaments of female attire. Those made from images are employed as ornaments and amulets on the caps of children. A few shells are sent to market with the pearls adhering, for sale to the curious or superstitious.

DOGS GET BORED.

How Man's Example Has Demoralized the Faithful Animal.

Some domestic animals can be very much bored indeed, says the London Times. This capacity seems to vary from the intelligence of the victim and with the closeness of his relations to mankind. We may well blush, for instance, when we think how man has demoralized the dog. We have taught the dog to be bored. We have corrupted him so much by our society that he can no longer depend upon himself, or even on other dogs for entertainment. A cow, it may be boldly said, never thinks of being bored. Give her plenty of grass and the company of another cow by way of gossip, give her a stream to stand in, and that cow is happy, as happy as the Buddha himself. No murmur escapes her lips, no glance of discontent shows in her placid eyes.

The dog, on the other hand, is always craving for society. A dog has been know to leave its master's house and betake itself to that of a richer neighbor, who saw more company and entertained the great. To please a dog something must always be going on. To him the whirl of gayety means life. He is notoriously incapable of even taking a walk by himself. He detests solitude. He very seldom even takes a walk with another dog; never, perhaps, except where there is a neighboring wood with rabbits in it. The dog lives for society and sport, the sure proof of an idle and ill-occupied mind.

Nature, landscape, in spite of the Duke of Argyll, is nothing to the dog. Within doors he is always asking to be let into a room and then asking to be let out of it if he thinks there is better—that is, more dissipated and frivolous—company elsewhere. The dog who is accidentally shut out of his master's house at night howls till he is let in again, usually next morning with the milk. He keeps all the parish awake, but never manages to waken his owner. The cause of all this disturbance is simply ennui and a sense of social neglect. The dog could be quite comfortable in the garden, but he feels that he is "out of it," and gives as much trouble as a person who is asking to be asked to a party.

In a state of nature it is most improbable that the dog had these offensive instincts. A fox, a wolf is never bored when not in confinement; he hunts, he sleeps, he plays with his cubs. Probably savages are never bored; at a corroboree you do not note men leaning against doors, or, rather, tree trunks, with an air of unspeakable tedium. They waltz in and enjoy themselves. It is clearly civilization which produces ennui, not only in men, women and children, but even in dogs.

PARIS has an insurance company that refuses to insure the life of anyone who uses hair dye.

THE various German fraternities of freemasons were incorporated into one body by Jost Dotzinger in 1444.

THERE is a club in Berlin called "The Giants," every member of which is six feet tall. Vienna has a "Lazy club," no member of which does anything for a living, and London a "Bald-headed club," where nothing but polished skulls are seen.

THE nickel-in-the-slot machines are to be abolished on Parisian boulevards, the prefect of police having decided that they can be set up only in railway stations or similar places where some one will be responsible for their being kept in order.

IN Holland a woman is a secondary consideration—and a poor consideration at that. No Dutch gentleman when walking on the sidewalk will move out of his way for a lady. The latter turns out invariably, however muddy or dangerous the street.

Just the Words for It.

They were talking about a man whom they had both known in the west.

"He was very even tempered."

"I should say so."

"Wonderfully quiet and collected."

"Yes. I was there when it happened and 'quiet and collected' are the very words for it."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, didn't you know about it? He was one of the men that tried to thaw out dynamite."—Washington Star.

—"I can always tell what a man eats by looking at him," said Jarley, "Well, what do I eat?" said Hawkins. "Judging from your seedy appearance, I should say seeds," said Jarley.

CATTLE shipped from Chicago to Philadelphia have been denied water during the whole trip. On their arrival in the Quaker city, just before being sold, they are given all the water they can drink, and excessive thirst makes them absorb about sixty pounds of the fluid. Some Women's Pet Aversions.

An English magazine the other day asked women to tell what they consider their pet aversion. Here are some of the answers received: "The endless discussion of the Irish question." "A formal lunch party." "My pet aversion has no name or being, yet I see her plainly with my spirit's eye. There she sits, always neat and unruffled, ever wearing that serene smile which makes me long to shake her, if only to see how she would look then. Always conscientious, always kind, her worst fault is that she has no fault." "My pet aversion is the fidgety, tidying woman." "Cows, of course! If only I knew what that long and steady stare means! But I don't, and mystery commands awe."

A Dutiful Husband.

Queen Austrigilda, the wife of Gontran, king of Burgundy, being on her death-bed, requested her husband to bury the two physicians who were then in attendance on her person in the same tomb with herself, as she attributed her coming dissolution to their want of skill. Like a dutiful husband, the king not only promised his young wife to carry out her request, but actually saw that it was done. In the good old times it was as risky to be a court physician as it is at present to be a medicine man among the Arizona or Oregon Indians.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.

Gentlemen: I take pleasure in informing you of the very beneficial results which have followed the use of DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE in the case of myself and wife. For a year I was subject to a distressing pain at the base of the brain and upper portion of the spinal cord. I lost flesh and was greatly troubled with sleeplessness. Your Nervine was highly recommended to me. My case had been so obstinate that I had no confidence in the efficacy of any medicine. Yet as a last resort I consented to give it a trial. Much to my surprise, I experienced marked benefit; my sleeplessness disappeared; my headache was removed; my spirits and general health greatly improved. I soon GAINED TWENTY POUNDS. ALL THIS OCCURRED AFTER LEARNED AND WELL KNOWN PHYSICIANS HAD FAILED. My wife is taking the Nervine with the best of results. LOUIS D. VANDERVERE.

And a good lamp
must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.
